"When a man of the celebrity of Col John S. Mesby changes his politics the whole people of the U ited States are interested in the reasons which have impelled bim to such a course. He voted for Grant, because he thought there cought to be a considerable following of the dominant party in the South. He voted for Harrison, because he thought his admitistration would be a national one, and that a President descended from an itlustrious Virginia family would treat the South sirly. On the contrary, the Colhe hated the men of the South who voted against him, and despised those who voted for him. This etaunch friend of Great accribes the pressure to pass the federal e ections or force bill to the personal offers of Harrison as d Reed, and he therefore was been his hands of both and returns to the bosom of the national democracy.—El Paso News.
